[00:00:07] Sharon Nettleton: I'm Sharon Nettleton and I'm one of the co-chairs with Patients for Patient Safety Canada.

[00:00:10] Sharon Nettleton: The London Declaration is a commitment that we as patients and families make, and members of Patients for Patient Safety Canada, to keep patient safety in the forefront of our care.

[00:00:23] Marty Hatlie: I'm Marty Hatlie, and I'm on the World Health Organization's advisory group for the Patients for Patient Safety Program.

[00:00:30] The London Declaration is important because it is the collective wisdom of a group of patient advocates who came together and crafted it over a three-day workshop, and I think very powerfully portrays what people brought in their hearts and in their minds to this challenge.

[00:00:48] And it's really stood the test of time; I mean, it has become the North Star for the entire Patients for Patient Safety program, if not the whole World Health Organization patient safety program as we go forward.

[00:01:00] It just keeps patients and families at the center of this important work. And it is a pledge of partnership.

[00:01:13] Group: In honour of those who have died, those who have been left disabled, our loved ones today, we will strive for excellence so that all people receiving health care are as safe as possible as soon as possible. This is our pledge of partnership.

[00:01:35] Sharon Nettleton: The London Declaration really connects us to our vision: every patient safe for all of Canada.
